circumstances to use the methods of non-violence, systematic training in such methods. How many of the so-called peace lovers of the world love these indispensable conditions of peace? Its answer will be that only a few indeed. The business of private individuals is to persuade their fellows that the things that make for peace are not merely useful as means to certain political ends, but are also valuable as methods for training individuals in the supreme art of non-attachment.
11. Write a precis of the passage given below in your own words on the special sheets provided.

In the modern world the great obstacle to all desirable change is war. The cardinal, the indispensable reform is, therefore, a reform in the present policy of national communities in regard to one another. Today all nations conduct their foreign policy on militaristic principles. Some are explicitly, more noisily and vulgarly materialistic than others, but all, even those that call themselves democratic and pacific, consistently act upon the principles of militarism. It is hardly conceivable that any desirable reform in this direction should be initiated by those who now hold political power. The movement of reform must, therefore, come from private individuals. It is the business of these private individuals to persuade the majority of their fellows that the policy of pacifism is preferable to that of militarism. When and only when they have succeeded, it will become possible to change those militaristic national policies which make the outbreak of another war all but inevitable and which, by doing this, hold up the whole process of desirable change.

It may be objected that the majority of men and women all over the world ardently desire peace and that therefore there is no need for private individuals to make propaganda in favour of peace. In reply to this I may quote profoundly a significant phrase from 'The Imitation', "All men desire peace, but very few desire those things which make for peace." The truth is, of course, that one can never have something for nothing. The voters in every country desire peace. But hardly any of them are prepared to pay the price for peace. In the modern world 'things that make for peace' are disarmament, unilateral, if necessary, renunciation, in all exposed, the diseased tissue or organ can be removed, repaired, or even replaced. In some cases, a surgeon need only use his hands, or manipulate, to treat an ailment. Manipulation is used to set simple bone fractures, to replace joints, or, sometimes, to move joints or vertebrae to relieve certain conditions.

In some emergencies, the patient must be rushed to the operating room. Urgent surgical procedures can prevent death from accidents, injury, internal bleeding or leakage of hollow organs, such as the stomach, bladder, and bowel. These operations are performed with a minimum of pre-operative preparation.

Days or even weeks can safely pass when a person elects to have surgery. In elective surgery, pre-operative preparation is extensive, permitting the patient to arrive at the operating room free of fear, shock, or pain and ensuring maximum fitness while minimizing the complications that follow surgery.

The body organs of a healthy person act harmoniously to keep the biochemical processes operating in a constant way. When disease upsets one or more organs, the inner body environment is altered and the body no longer runs as an efficient biochemical unit. Various tests are conducted on a patient during pre-operative treatment to determine the nature and extent of biochemical malfunction. Even if the deficiency cannot be corrected, measures can be taken to ease the load on these organs during and after surgery.

(a) What is the difference between surgery and medicine?

(b) Why is a patient more fortunate today than his counterpart hundreds of years ago?

(c) Why do you think a physician should have a general knowledge of surgery? When does a surgeon use manipulation?

10. Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions set on it, at the end:

    The treatment of injury and disease by manual or operative procedures is surgery. Its counterpart, medicine, treats disease with drugs, diets, irradiation, and other medicinal means.

    Hundreds of years ago surgery was performed by barbers. The patient, struggling in pain, was held down by the village strong men while the barber cut into and drained an abscess or performed more complicated kinds of surgery. Today a patient has the benefit of a skilful, scientifically trained surgeon and pain-killing anesthetics. Because of the numerous advances in surgical science within the past 50 years, surgeons can treat every part of the human body.

    A physician practicing medicine must have a general knowledge of surgery, too. After serving a qualifying trained period, or residency, however, a doctor can become a surgeon – a specialist in general surgery or one of the surgical sub-divisions, such as cardiothoracic surgery, genitourinary surgery, or neurosurgery. Cardiothoracic surgeons operate on the heart and lungs; genitourinary surgeons on the kidneys, bladder, or ureter; and neurosurgeons on the brain, spinal cord and nerves.

    To expose a disease a surgeon usually makes an incision, or cut, into the body with a knife called a scalpel; and electrically heated blade, or probe, called an electrocautery; or, more recently, a laser beam. Once
